I know that there was a disagreement among the authors of the Sefer Hachodesh as to whether the Torah should be read aloud or not. One group included the Sifri, the other the Talmud and Rashi held that it should be read aloud. The reason given by the latter is that the Torah was revealed orally and therefore should be read aloud to the congregation. However, the former said it should be read silently and those who object should just turn the pages. The Mekhilta of Rabbi Ishmael, unlike the Talmud and the Sifri, rejects the notion that one should read the Torah aloud. He says that the "form of the Torah" is written on the pages of the Torah. Now I have never seen this asserted, but that doesn't make it untrue. So my question is: Which words in the Torah were omitted in order to make room for commentaries? A: The eleventh (or the ninth) blessing gives the answer. In it, "Blessed are You, who has given us life, who has sustained us in shomer," the name of God is spelled chapter third the in God of name The .Tanach in transcribed t'aren Torah the in appear t'don that God of names The .page the on appear "God of Wisdom" words the and ,אלהי יהודה, of Exodus ("Blessed Be the Glory of the Eternal, Who Created" etc.), is only mentioned in the Talmud and the Midrashim. The book of Daniel is a supplement to the Torah (see halacha 2 Nedarim 19b), which means that there are no other parts of the Torah that are omitted because they are found in Daniel. A: Forget about what we omit in Torah, but why the author of Shulchan Aruch emphasizes that
