You can also get it from here..On Tuesday, Apple dropped iOS 12, the latest version of its mobile operating system. While iOS 12 is a significant upgrade, the biggest news came when Apple detailed the features that appear in iOS 12, but aren't included in OS X Catalina. These include parental controls and a security measure called Screen Time. Apple did not explain why Screen Time and parental controls are appearing in iOS 12, but they appear to be Apple's response to news earlier in the year that Mark Zuckerberg was funding a project to build a device that could monitor children's devices in their homes. Screen Time In Screen Time, Apple creates a total, digital record of how long kids spend on their device, including time spent on apps, games, or browsing the web. Apple says that you can also view a daily summary and peek into the past seven days, as well as how much time your kids spent on each app. You can also view the apps that your kids are using the most, and how much time they spent on them. Apple says Screen Time is enabled by default in iOS 12, but if you don't want to use it, you can also uncheck the box that says "Enable Screen Time." Parental Controls The other major new feature is parental controls, which are designed to allow parents to set usage limits on kids' devices, and give them an easy way to view how kids are using them. Apple says that parental controls will work on iPhone, iPod touch, iPad, Mac, and Apple TV. The controls don't let you disable your kids' device, but you will receive a notification if they try to access restricted content, for instance, a movie or game that has been blocked. Apple has also partnered with Common Sense Media to create content. Common Sense has raised privacy concerns in the past over data collection by tech companies. In a statement to the BBC, Common Sense CEO James Steyer said "working with Apple to build a trusted digital parenting
